Is spring waiting on the park board or is the park board waiting on spring?

Anyway the "grayed" turner? Sunday did not knock out the city works plant, which is something to be thankful for.

Uncle Joe Cannon may be among the lame ducks of the country but he surely knows how to land on the hogholes of reform.

If you cannot say anything good about your neighbor try the plan of saying nothing. It may do you some good and him less harm.

The commercial club luncheon today will be up to the usual standard of success and interest and you will miss something if you are not there.

When it rains in Oklahoma there is no place on earth that can beat it. The trouble is that it does not always rain in a business like manner at the exact time we farmers would have it.

There are so many kinds of mean men on earth it is hard to pick out any one class as the meanest, but the one who knocks on everything just as a matter of habit is easily the most to be shunned.

There is nothing in the nature of a boom in Tulsa but a glance over the list of buildings under course of construction at the present time might cause a resident in some of the "dead ones" to think there was something in the nature of a boomlet at work in this vicinity.

The editors of the state are coming. They will meet in Bartlesville Friday and Saturday and spend the night in Tulsa Sunday afternoon and night for a final time before returning to their respective homes. Tulsa should see that the editors and their wives are given a reception, even if it is Sunday, that they will never forget.

Kansas City is having a discussion over its efforts to have grand opera. Just watch Tulsa when its new convention hall is completed, and see if we do not put on a season of grand opera that will make you sit up and take notice from one end of the country to the other. This is the city that does things and there is nothing too big for us to tackle.

Among the good country newspapers of Oklahoma the Collinsville Times ranks very high. In fact there are a lot of observers who claim it is the best country paper in the state. This is not said with a view to swelling the editor's head, nor for the purpose of supplying him with a hair restorer, although he needs the latter but enough, but it slipped in here because it is worthy of attention and because Collinsville is one of Tulsa's neighboring cities and we are proud of anything which enhances its credit. The trouble with the average country newspaper is that it is never appreciated for even as much as it deserves and the editor grows tired of inappreciation and could not do his best even if he felt inclined to do so.

OKLAHOMA POLITICS.

The political situation in Oklahoma is about as bad as it is possible for politics to be in any state in the Union. One party is just about as bad off as the others. They are all broke up over internal dissensions and rancor. The socialists have been making a steady increase but so far they have not been able to make any formidable headway, as a state of confusion. Then a few cities they have secured control of some of the offices through divisions and rancor among the citizens and the other parties, but no where have they been able to make a practical demonstration of their methods of running the government. They simply get the offices and draw the salaries and perform the routine work of municipal government much the same as republicans or democrats would have performed the work had they been in power. Therefore the socialists even where they have gotten into power have not been able to make a practical demonstration of how they would run things if they could put their ideas and principles into practical working order. Some day they may be able to control the state, but that is likely to be a very remote day, notwithstanding the fact that at each succeeding election the socialist vote has shown a steady increase.

But even among socialists there is a difference of opinion; there is the radical and the conservative socialist and this division is almost as marked and distinct as the division between the radical and conservative members of the democratic and republican parties and is bound to become more distinct as the socialists gain in strength and importance as a political factor.

According to a dispatch from Washington the democratic delegation in congress is greatly exercised over the possibility of a coalition in this state between republicans and socialists and they fear that with the break in their own ranks the state will be lost by the democrats. So far as the coalition between the socialists and republicans is concerned the delegation at Washington evidently has better ears than most people in Oklahoma for it is a mighty remote possibility. It is not factional divisions in the democratic party that threatens it so much as the fact that no matter which or what faction might gain control of the party organization there would be no hope of cleaning up the dirty political condition which has been proven to exist in Oklahoma. That is where the situation is inherently weak and rightfully alarming to the democrats. Factional politics if of a healthy and wholesome character based upon sound and reasonable grounds is a good thing for the dominant party in any state but when the party is too weak and cowardly to clean its own stables and fearlessly stand up for a good government, as the democratic party has proven itself to be in Oklahoma, it can only be made clean by a good beating. It ought to be beat as the republican party was beaten nationally last year in order to get right with itself. And the only thing that will keep the democrats from a good beating is that there is nothing better offered in its place. The republican party has not yet recovered from the factional and rotten conditions brought about through a long line of fights over federal patronage and it gets any where it will be through the sheer force of the influence of the citizenship of the state that is for a clean and honest state government first and a partisan government after everything else has been attended to.

If there are enough of the full moon segregation who want this kind of a government and enough republicans and democrats who will shake off all purely partisan politics

ABE MARTIN

His flash got up early ever morning to see if President Wilson has appointed anybody he ever heard of before. A fellow may be too proud to beg, but he's never too proud to beat the corner grocer.

and get a line for a man up Oklahoma, ought to be crushed up and a new deal started next year. It is a good time to begin thinking about how to accomplish this rather than to make a purely party fight. The people are not so much much about party politics but they would like to see a state administration that would give them something to feel proud of and one that would elevate rather than lower the standing of the state both at home and abroad. We need that kind of an administration mighty bad. We need it worse than we have ever needed it before, and let us hope it will ever need it again.

Tulsa should have one of its parks put in a semi-completed condition this year so that the people who are now on earth can see and enjoy some of the beauties and pleasures of a real park. This acquiring land for future generations to allow to grow up in weeds and brush is all right in its way, but why the men and women and children now here would like to see would be a real park, where they could go and enjoy themselves occasionally, not next year or the year after, but this year, 1914. There has been plenty of time for some real park improving to have been done and there is no excuse for further delays or procrastination. Let's have one real park.

The indictments by the Oklahoma county grand jury are almost as much of a joke as the impeachments in the legislature. A grand jury is usually an ex-parte farce with only one side represented and a bunch of gossip mongers rolling under their stony tongues a lot of irrelevant and immaterial rumors and charges. The principle a grand jury works under is wrong in conception and rarely ever accomplishes much good, and if the jurisprudence of the land were simplified as it should be there would be no occasion whatever for a grand jury.

When you come to think about it your Uncle Joe Cannon isn't so old as a lot of fellows who have even fewer years to their credit. He is still a sturdy man and will only be a little past eighty when we have our next presidential election. Who knows, who knows—he is liable to be an active factor in that race and it is a cinch that he will be active if he is in it at all.

COURT NOTES

CITY NEWS

J. A. WILKINSON has the frame up for a $9,000 residence for C. A. Mayo at Fourteenth and Chesapeake avenues.

WHEN the city park board meets this week, it will face the task of selecting a site for a new park in the South side. Several propositions have been submitted to the board.

W. J. CHICKENHARE was again in evidence on Tulsa's streets yesterday, after an absence of about a month, during which time he enjoyed a fishing trip in the Ozark mountains.

ABOUT $400 worth of damage was done to G. N. Wright's automobile yesterday noon when it crashed into a street car. John Davis, the colored chauffeur, is said to have lost control of the machine. The front part of the car was badly damaged.

WM. M. GRESHAM, city clerk of Collinsville, was in Tulsa last night on his way to Oklahoma City where he will attend to some business matters. That's about all, excepting that Mrs. Wm. Gresham was along. The marriage occurred Sunday at Collinsville.

ONE OF THE recent entertainment taken part in by the old soldiers of the city occurred at the home of Mrs. Lizzie Conkley, 1123 South Cincinnati. It was given in honor of E. S. Parvins, who came from the Soldiers Home at Leavenworth, Kan., to make his home on South Carson avenue with his daughter, Miss Bertha Parvins. Mrs. Maud Stanton assisted in the entertaining. Those present were J. E. Ayres, post commander; J. F. Hickey, quartermaster; William Query, ex-post chaplain; W. P. Hough, officer of the day; S. L. Simons, ex-post chaplain; J. C. Magne, chaplain; C. B. Whitten and J. L. Jones. Miss Hazel Stanton gave a reading. Remarks were made by Messrs. Ayres, Query and Jones. Mr. Parvins expressed his appreciation. Refreshments were served.

R. W. PURVIS was yesterday served with a subpoena to testify before the federal grand jury at Kansas City today. He was excused from duty from part duty in the Tulsa court, and left last night for Kansas City. Purvis was formerly local agent for the Katy railroad.

THE REGULAR MEETING of the board of county commissioners was held yesterday, but only minor matters were taken up. The board decided to start work at once improving the road in West Tulsa from the bridge to the belt line. This, which includes about 600 feet, will be macadamized and the city will attend to the balance of the road.

"JUST A JOKE," said the firemen at Central station last night when asked about the report that John French had inherited some money. "The reporter for the afternoon paper talked in on a conversation and we kidded him into believing this inherited fortune business," they explained. The story in question appeared under a two-column head on the front page of the evening sheet.

CONGRESSMAN JIM DAVENPORT has sent in the name of Ralph R. Johnson, who is now employed in the Tulsa postoffice, to Postmaster General Burleson, to be assistant postmaster here, to succeed Frank Seaman, resigned the office to be filled by promotion from the civil service. There have been three candidates for this position, Robert Galbreath, democratic national committeeman of Tulsa has also recommended Johnson.

TULSA DRUGGIST DESERVES PRAISE

Getman & Campbell deserves praise from Tulsa people for introducing here three simple buethorn bark and glycerine mixture, known as Adler-ika. This simple German remedy first became famous by curing appendicitis and it has now been discovered that just a single dose relieves sour stomach and constipation instantly. It's quick action is a big surprise to people.

OVERLOOKED A MASTERPIECE.

A Painting by Pieter de Hooch Almost Escaped London Experts.

From the London Mail.
Intense excitement was caused at Christie's when a little dark Dutch painting of an interior with figures, coming up for sale among many unimportant works by the minor small masters, was unexpectedly run up for $150 to $21,000.

Messrs. Christie themselves had apparently not thought very highly of it, as it was catalogued in small type under the name of S. van Hoogstraeten, and to the end of the sale many of the dealers and experts present could not account for the price. But the supposed Hoogstraeten is a very fine and fully signed work of a far greater master—namely, Pieter de Hooch. It is fully described as such in Hofstede de Groot's new edition of Smith's Catalogue Raisonne, where it is traced back to a sale at Amsterdam in 1792. It was sold again at Amsterdam in 1842, and finally in 1845 for 800 florins, the purchaser being a Mr. Burton.

Had not the true nature of the picture been recognized by two or three people there, experts it might have been knocked down for about a twentieth of the amount actually realized. Pieter de Hooch (about 1629-1684) is the Dutch painter whose little masterpieces, influenced by the contemporary art of Rembrandt in a wider field, illustrate the painter's delight in the intimate beauties of cottage interiors or the limited open air of courtyards and narrow streets. Three of his pictures are in the National gallery—one called "Woman and Child," and another "Lady and Child in a Courtyard."

Carle's Early Stage Training.

From the New York World.
Richard Carle the other day was telling a little group of friends about his early stage experiences. "My first engagement," he said, "was with Rich and Harris in the support of Jimmy Powers. One of the characters had a line addressed to me which read: 'Do your worst!' Afterward Julian Mitchell, who was stage manager, came to me and said: 'Don't follow those instructions too literally, Carle.'"
